Education has always had two objectives: on the one hand to give skill and on the other, to impart a vaguer thing, which we may call wisdom. The role of skill has become very much larger than it used to be and is increasingly threatening to oust the role of wisdom. At the same time, it must be admitted that wisdom in our world is useless except for those who realize the great part played by skills, for it is an increase of skill that is the distinctive feature of our world. Although scientific skill is necessary, it is by no means sufficient. A dictatorship of men of science would very soon become horrible. Skill without wisdom may prove to be purely destructive. For this reason, if for no other, it is of great importance that those who receive a scientific education should not be merely scientific but should have some understanding of that kind of wisdom which, if it can be imparted at all, can only be imparted by the cultural side of education. Science cannot teach you patience, it cannot teach you sympathy, it cannot teach you a sense of human dignity. These things, in so far as they can be taught in formal education are most likely to emerge from the learning of history and great literature.
